R2R HAPPY NEW YEAR Gurgaon 2018. Gurgaon. 2017. Households from Gurgaon. 432 1 115k Residences for sale, Gurgaon |À .A bus driver in Ontario lost his licence and was slapped with a hefty fine after his passengers on board were caught with marijuana. Andrea Asghar, 46, has been driving for the Via Rail agency for 11 years. The mother of three was moving passengers from Niagara Falls to Toronto on April 12 when he pulled over and let a male passenger off at a St. Catharines rest stop, despite receiving a warning message about six people smoking marijuana. A man approached the driver and asked for a cigarette as he got off, prompting Asghar to pull up alongside him. Asghar said he was distracted and ran a red light, which caused him to be fined and lose his licence. In a statement, Via Rail said it is "obviously upset" by the incident and "does not tolerate this type of behaviour on any of our [] buses." "The management of Via Rail worked with the agency in charge of the bus company, who agreed to financially compensate the passengers for the inconvenience caused by the male passenger's offence," the statement reads. The company also provided her with counselling and an apology letter. "We apologize to the public for this behavior, and we remind all drivers and passengers of the importance of being very careful and attentive while driving or riding on our buses." "Drivers and employees who violate these conditions, including smoking marijuana while driving or riding on our buses, face harsh consequences, including the loss of their licences and financial penalties," it adds. According to Ontario's Highway Traffic Act, Asghar could face six penalty points and $2,000 in fines. Asghar told CTV News Toronto he didn't want to speak about the incident publicly, because he wanted to let his wife, who he says supports him through all his work-related issues, decide for herself if she wants to speak to the media. "I just want to say that I'm an honest person," he said. "I've just spent 10 years of my life in this job." Asghar said he's received support from family and

There is a demand for quick and convenient delivery of image data from a customer to a print shop and printing of images printed at the print shop upon receiving the image data. However, the image printed at the print shop is often different from the image transmitted from the customer. For example, when the customer designates printing of an image to which a specific image is given by using a process control language, the image is printed at the print shop with a different color than that originally designated. Thus, the print shop receives the image with a different color than that specified by the customer. The customer generally has some knowledge of the image represented by the received image data. However, the customer cannot always recognize the cause of the color difference. For example, the customer may have forgotten to specify printing of a specific image or may have forgotten to designate printing with a specific color. In such cases, the customer may request correction of the color difference. Upon receiving a request for color correction from a customer, it is necessary to identify the image data which represent the image to be corrected. For this purpose, the customer is required to specify the image data. However, such a procedure is inconvenient to the customer, and is generally unsatisfactory. Therefore, an object of the present invention is to provide a method and system for correcting a color image based upon image information corresponding to the color image, which makes it possible to identify the image data corresponding to the image to be corrected without requiring the customer to specify the image data. According to the present invention, there is provided a method for correcting a color image, comprising the steps of: storing information corresponding to a plurality of colors; judging whether or not the information corresponding to a specific color is stored; and correcting a color of the image based upon the specific color when
